INVITED TO RITUAL

Republicans of New York have taken wise action. Their state committee invited those who had year declined to act with the party but who adhered to its principles, to resume their connection with it and recommended that no so-called "ritual" be performed which would forbid or hinder their entry. Thus those former republicans who declined to vote for Mr. Blaine are not to be refused fellowship in the party on this account. It is believed that nearly all of them think the republican party is a better and safer instrument of government than the democratic and it is well, therefore, if they want to act with it in future, to give them opportunity to do so.

Then the nomination of Mr. Blaine was never a more injudicious political act, and it was a singular phenomenon of politics during these last ten years that there were so many who could not see it. It was as plain to sober judgment before the election was made as it was when the election drew near, that the great fight was to be in New York, and it was equally plain that New York was indispensable to republican success. Yet it was entirely clear that there would be special opposition to Mr. Blaine in New York that this opposition would proceed from several different quarters, acting in combination entered into from the most opposite reasons. With the factional differences among republicans in New York, Mr. Blaine had been identified. To the Conklin republicans he was the one objectionable man. To those who were most objectionable was he to those whom he served. The demand for a non-partisan civil service by the prohibitionists, likewise, he was distrusted, because he had not been clear in his testimony for prohibition in his own state. That was the large numbers of men, acting from opposite motives, and who never could agree with each other in anything, nevertheless could make common cause against Mr. Blaine. For example, there could be no wider chasm than that existing between the civil service reformers and the rank-and-file republicans, and neither of these factions could have been induced by any possibility to support a candidate nominated by the other, and yet the bid taken by the republican convention at Chicago united them at once in opposition to its candidate. This was certain to take place as a consequence of this nomination, and yet they who foretold it were scorned and disbelieved.

It is true enough that much of the republican opposition to Mr. Blaine had its source in pride of origin, in political grudges and in personal vanity. These various motives sprang the hostility of Schurz, Boutwell, Curtis and the Harper, and the four of the young-wump journals, except whose advice Mr. Blaine had nominated. It was vain to assert that these malices were unworthy. So too was such a fact to be dealt with. The rational way of politics was to take them into account and give them their proper weight. In other words, common sense demanded that some one else be nominated than the one man whose candidacy would provoke and concentrate all the popular opposition in the great pivotal state. But the reason of reason comes over me in the mass mind. It comes over an individual, and this was an act of statesmanship. In no other way through the most logical course by a republican clodder could the democratic party have been put into power—so obvious is that party everywhere except in the states of the confederacy. And the history that makes editions cling to it still so that even those republicans who voted with it last year, or most of them, would prefer not to continue the relation then begun.

One of New York and Massachusetts the republicans who voted to support Haines are not numerous enough to constitute an appreciable political force but in these states they are a force that wise political judges can no longer ignore. Because it was ignored at the national republican convention last year the party suffered defeat. It is not wise to ignore the force now that it is then. To say that the motives and sentiments of some of these men in their refusal to support the candidate last year were contemptible is now nothing to the purpose! Let them act with the party again if they will and this time let a candidate be named who will get the whole republican vote. It would be better to do this than to have a candidate last year, and it will be easy in 1856. The chances are always immensely against the election of any man to the presidency who has long been in politics, who has a striking and aggressive individuality that overshadows other men, and who has set himself against the opinions and interests of other leaders and their followers in his own party. To make allowance for human nature in politics is always good sense, and not to do so is always folly.

A STRANGE IDOLATRY

"The worship of law as an omnipotent force," says the New York Evening Post, "is the most curious form of idolatry known among civilized men." The remark refers to the strange notion entertained by a considerable number of people, that the moment a sacred formula against the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors is entered in the statute book, the fight against liquor and the liquor trade is won. Such persons, continues the Post, "forget that the state would be as bad as the same people after the enactment of the law as before, and do not reflect that if in certain parts of the state a majority did not before the enactment consider it wrong to drink, and consequently to sell, liquor, they cannot be expected through their servants to prohibit it so late because the legislature has made it law to that effect."

Another paragraph from the same article is worth quoting. "It is also the stand inhabitants of the Western Reserve, supposing, with provincial ignorance, that any place may be made a second Oberlin if the law only commands it; seek to forbids entirely the sale of all liquors in cities like Cincinnati and Cleveland, with their large contingents of Germans. In New York the curse of vice is seen, and it is possible to prevent the traffic among the natives and with us, but that this is possible, the public sentiment is against it, debars themselves with the notion that if the legislature will pass a law making prohibition operative throughout the state, all the saloons and ale-houses in New York and Brooklyn where it is not or that public sentiment would not sustain the application of such a system. Until the friends of temperance master the elemental principle of popular government, that law is worthless, and worse than worthless, unless it has public sentiment behind it, the property of their accomplishments much for the cause which they have at heart is hopeless."

An over enthusiastic writer, who has been on a visit to the 11th and was received with an abundant welcome and hospitality, writes in follows:

We are one people North and South. The old root of bitterness is now dead, and I only wish to add that the 11th is a good place to go to that master. The flag is dear in Saint Louis and Cincinnati is in Connecticut.

The comment of the Chicago Journal on this suggests that the eloquent writer did not see any citizen get under the flag and attempt to protect the rights of its folds to vote a republican ticket. Had he witnessed an experiment of the kind he would have indulged in rhetoric of a different sort.

After having pursued Gen. Grant with violent enthusiasm through his whole life, democrats, through their conventions, are eulogizing him when dead. The latest performances in this line have just taken place in Ohio and Pennsylvania. It remains one of the passionate opposition of the democratic party to the war, followed by the claim that it was democratic soldiers who suppressed the rebellion, of the strenuous effort made by the party to prevent the abolition of slavery, followed by the assertion that the party was against slavery all the time; or the long struggle made by the party against civil and political rights for the colored race, culminating now in the claim that the negro has ever found and still finds in the democratic party the most faithful supporters of his rightmost privileges. Yet somehow it fits the democratic neglect of the negro, and with wrath to infinite that there has been anything "unfeeling" or "hypocritical" in this career, or that Candor is one of the many virtues that this party has not cultivated for a long time.

LIVING LIQUID LIFE

Up a short time ago we had occasion to compare the rates of grain storage at Port and at other points on the Pacific coast with the rates at Oregon, British Columbia and elsewhere. It was shown that the charges were less than one-half of the charges at the port just mentioned and the Western States. In Chicago within the past few days there is a protest against high storage rates which it is claimed, have much to do with the present depression in prices of grain in that market. The Inter Ocean declares that while reductions have been made in these charges in various places, elevator owners regardless of market values, seem disposed to "charge all the traffic will bear" by maintaining a rate of one cent a bushel for about 20 per cent of the value of wheat, oats, etc., per cent of the value of corn, and 10 per cent of the value of barley, present unless the elevator has a full support of the market price. The field is to be the battle ground.

LONDON, Aug. 26.—The new Russian proposal has been submitted to Lord Balfour, and the same, and the English government declines to either propose or accept arbitration of the difference between it and the government of Spain concerning the Caroline Islands affair.

LONDON, Aug. 26.—The bill which which was called out in the time of the Pendleton, has been ordered to be demobilized.

hopped it in this will shame King Alfonso, who despising the co-operation of the German army, the town of Aragon will hope to German beer.

The Standard's Berlin correspondent says that the Caroline dispute is referred to arbitration by the Spanish, and not King Humbert, will decide the question.

CURRENT OPINION

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Aug. 26.—Mr. Maxwell thinks too much to run in his business. The time is not when he may be called a speculator. The time is not when the market is up, and when the market is down, it is over crowded and glutted with production.

MARSHFIELD, Wis., Aug. 26.—The grain market in St. Louis is a protest against high storage rates which it is claimed, have much to do with the present depression in prices of grain in that market. The Inter Ocean declares that while reductions have been made in these charges in various places, elevator owners regardless of market values, seem disposed to "charge all the traffic will bear" by maintaining a rate of one cent a bushel for about 20 per cent of the value of wheat, oats, etc., per cent of the value of corn, and 10 per cent of the value of barley, present unless the elevator has a full support of the market price.
